Letter from the CEO, Founder and Co-Founder & Executive Vice Chairman

When the cure for Parkinson's disease is found, and the story of The Michael J. Fox Foundation written, the years 2010 and 2011 will surely mark the beginning of a new chapter in the narrative.

In the past 18 months, across our broad portfolio of activities, we have embarked on an ambitious set of initiatives that offer new and groundbreaking opportunities for the patient and research communities to come together and be part of the momentum we're building in our urgent pursuit of a Parkinson's cure.

The Foundation is now approaching $300 million in research funded — all for projects targeted to push the most promising therapeutic breakthroughs closer to pharmacy shelves. In 2010, we received nearly 65,000 contributions and reviewed over 600 PD-specific grants from research teams all over the world. Our in-house staff of PhDs and business strategists worked directly with hundreds of researchers and clinicians from academia and industry to manage our portfolio of over 300 active grants. In our short history we have earned tremendous credibility with the research community. And today we can say with confidence that the model we have built is speeding progress:

- We have enabled outcomes-focused work on over 100 therapeutic targets and invested more than $100 million in the development of disease-modifying therapies. On the back of this investment, we have identified and advanced several leading targets — including genetic targets LRRK2 and alpha-synuclein as well as dopamine-protecting neurotrophic factors — for prioritized action.

- Building on significant and systematic biomarker investments of $28 million from 2002–2010, our landmark $45-million biomarker study, the Parkinson's Progression Markers Initiative, is now under way and enrolling PD patients and controls in 21 sites in the United States and Europe, with nine industry funding partners in place and expansion to Australia in the offing for 2012.

- MJFF funding since 2005 has validated no fewer than five promising drug targets for dyskinesia — the debilitating side effect of long-term dopamine replacement — with two already in clinical testing and the remainder advancing there rapidly.

- The Foundation has forged paradigm-shifting processes for developing critical research tools and then distributing them at low or no cost to academic and industry researchers — including pre-clinical models and basic laboratory reagents that allow scientists to efficiently study cellular functions at work in Parkinson's pathology and test new treatment approaches.

- We are now seeing greater than ever interest and investment in PD by industry players — from small and mid-sized biotechs to the giants of Big Pharma — whose resources, expertise and business incentive are non-negotiable requirements to take promising new treatments through clinical testing and regulatory approval.

Throughout this report, you'll read about the strategic roadmap developed by MJFF to orchestrate and streamline Parkinson's therapeutic development, providing both financial and intellectual leadership that has galvanized the field and moved us tangibly closer to definitive clinical trials and breakthrough treatments.

This is exciting. Yet it also poses new challenges for our problem-solving, which we are meeting head-on with fresh, collaborative platforms designed to inspire the Parkinson's community — and the general public — to action in greater numbers than ever:

- As resource-intensive as pre-clinical research is, the clinical projects we see on the horizon come with exponentially steeper price tags. The Brin Wojcicki Challenge creates a critical opportunity for the Foundation to double the capacity-building funds (up to $50 million) we can raise by the end of 2012. With your help in earning match dollars, we will ensure that no promising clinical study goes unfunded due to lack of resources.

- Underenrollment in clinical research, by people both with and without PD, slows research progress — and we all pay the price in terms of higher costs and longer time horizons to treatment breakthroughs. The Foundation has stepped up to answer this challenge with the development of a new Web-based tool, Fox Trial Finder, a smart and user-friendly solution to connect willing volunteers with the specific trials that need them.

- Our grassroots fundraising network, Team Fox, has grown exponentially since its founding in 2006. With more than $15 million raised, this group remains the passionate standard-bearer for our message of can-do optimism and action across the country and around the world — and its numbers only continue to increase.

No doubt the road ahead remains challenging, but we are gaining real traction. We know we are on track to achieve our shared goal of eradicating Parkinson's disease. Thank you, as always, for your vital support.

Leading on Biomarkers/PPMI

PARKINSON'S
PROGRESSION
INITIATIVE

Play a Part in Parkinson's Research

BIOMARKERS

There are no biomarkers for Parkinson's disease, meaning drugmakers don't know whether the drugs they are testing actually work. The Michael J. Fox Foundation-sponsored Parkinson's Progression Markers Initiative exists to identify biomarkers, putting lines on the playing field in order to develop new and better treatments for PD.

“The role of The Michael J. Fox Foundation in conceiving PPMI and shaping its course has been extremely innovative. It’s truly impressive how the Foundation has brought the community together and Pfizer is proud to be part of it.” John Dunlop, PhD, Pfizer, Inc.

In 2010 The Michael J. Fox Foundation launched the five-year, $45-million Parkinson’s Progression Markers Initiative (PPMI), a groundbreaking longitudinal study to validate biomarkers of Parkinson’s disease.

Biomarkers are characteristics that can be measured and evaluated objectively to diagnose Parkinson’s earlier, provide clearer outcomes from clinical trials and lower the hurdle to industry investment in PD. PPMI brings full circle MJFF’s investments of $28 million in biomarker discovery from 2002 to 2010. The study is now under way, enrolling 400 Parkinson’s patients and 200 control volunteers in 21 sites in the United States and Europe, and will expand to Australia in 2012; it is funded by MJFF in conjunction with a consortium of industry partners (see page 16).

Parkinson’s patients have access only to treatments that temporarily alleviate symptoms. If a biomarker is found through PPMI, researchers will have a critical tool to use in the quest for disease-modifying therapies that can slow or stop the progression of the disease. The existence of a biomarker would de-risk PD drug development by increasing the certainty of research results, likely enabling smaller, shorter, more predictable and potentially less expensive clinical trials.

Yet the development of reliable and valid measures of PD requires such a major systematic infrastructure investment that no single company has the incentive to do it alone. By establishing a consortium of industry partners to help fund the study, PPMI offers companies the opportunity to help move the field forward while taking on only a fraction of the risk.

PPMI exemplifies MJFF’s commitment to streamlining the scientific process, increasing collaboration/data-sharing, and putting resources where other funders can’t or won’t in order to speed life-transforming treatments to patients.

Increasing Participation in Clinical Trials

FOX  TRIAL FINDER

THE MICHAEL J. FOX FOUNDATION FOR PARKINSON'S RESEARCH

“Today, America is waiting expectantly for a new generation of scientific breakthroughs. But we can’t lose sight of a critical element of any success — our own active engagement in the process.” Michael J. Fox

CLINICAL TRIALS

The serious shortage of participants in clinical research impedes therapeutic progress and creates a tremendous financial burden as trial timelines expand. The trial in this example requires 60 patients. The more patients recruited per month, the quicker the results and at a lesser cost.

The Michael J. Fox Foundation created the Fox Trial Finder tool (www.foxtrialfinder.org) to streamline the flow of volunteers into trials.

As the U.S. population ages, the number of individuals affected by Parkinson’s disease will only grow. According to a recent Wall Street Journal opinion piece by Nobel laureate Stanley Prusiner and former Secretary of State George Shultz, three out of five Americans will suffer from a nervous-system disease such as Parkinson’s or Alzheimer’s.

Clearly, the need for high-impact investment in research has never been more urgent. But while financial investment is critical, dollars alone will not take us across the finish line in pursuit of therapeutic breakthroughs. The active involvement of Parkinson’s patients and their loved ones in clinical research is vital to finding the cure. Yet today, as many as 80 percent of clinical trials face recruitment challenges, which significantly increase costs and delay progress toward breakthroughs.

In summer 2011, MJFF launched Fox Trial Finder (www.foxtrialfinder.org), a simple Web-based solution to address these challenges head-on. With the single-minded goal of bringing more willing volunteers to the PD clinical trials that urgently need them, Fox Trial Finder combines robust and relevant content — the Foundation is making a concerted effort to include all Parkinson’s trials in the tool’s database — with a smart system focused on matching volunteers to trials and developing relationships that persist beyond an initial search. An expanded definition of the critical stakeholders is also key; the tool proactively engages clinical coordinators, physicians, and caregivers as well as patients themselves.

While it remains early days for this tool, an enthusiastic response so far reinforces our instinct that a tool leveraging technology, education and effective communication can inspire the Parkinson’s population to action in significant numbers. Within two months of the site’s initial launch, nearly 1,000 potential research volunteers had created profiles; 103 members of trial teams had registered, and personnel from seven trials had contacted the Foundation after learning of Fox Trial Finder from patients at their clinics.

Accelerating LRRK2 Therapeutic Development

TRADITIONAL

THE FOX EFFECT

Identification of a drug target typically unfolds in an uncoordinated way as different labs analyze it from discrete angles, often at the expense of opportunities for collaboration. MJFF is orchestrating efforts to encourage sharing data and resources early in the process so that LRRK2 can evolve toward practical drug therapy faster.

STREAMLINED

OVER 3,000 INDIVIDUALS

LRRK2 RESEARCH.

With leading support from the Brin Wojcicki Foundation, MJFF is pioneering a new approach to streamline drug development around LRRK2, the most common genetic contributor to Parkinson’s disease. The Foundation is funding a LRRK2 Biology Consortium of more than 30 investigators testing critical hypotheses about normal and diseased LRRK2; assembling worldwide cohorts of people with LRRK2 mutations and their family members who can be studied to better understand LRRK2 Parkinson’s; leading development and distribution of critical research tools required to effectively study LRRK2; and ensuring that the pharmaceutical industry’s expertise is leveraged in the pursuit of LRRK2-based therapeutics.

Key MJFF accomplishments in LRRK2:

- Determination that LRRK2 kinase activity is required for Parkinson’s toxicity (LRRK2 Biology Consortium members at Johns Hopkins University and University of Alabama at Birmingham)
- Discovery, development and distribution of a compound that inhibits LRRK2 kinase activity (LRRK2 Biology Consortium members at Harvard University and University of Dundee), a prototype for a possible treatment
- By year-end 2012, development and distribution of an anticipated 17 LRRK2 pre-clinical models to industry and academic researchers at reduced costs — and distribution of another seven (MJFF staff scientists)
- Development and distribution of the field’s now-most-commonly-used LRRK2 antibodies (critical research tools to determine where in the brain LRRK2 is functioning and measure changes in LRRK2 function or expression that may result from disease) (MJFF staff scientists)
- Establishment of the LRRK2 Industry Advisory Group to engage with leading pharmaceutical and biotech companies working in LRRK2 in order to identify and tackle the roadblocks they face in developing LRRK2-based therapies

Driving New Treatments for Dyskinesia

DYSKINESIA

“With support from MJFF since 2005, mGluR5 has moved from basic discovery to clinical testing and attracted investments from two drug companies. There is a lot of excitement about its promise to impact patients’ lives in the near term.” Angela Cenci-Nilsson, MD, PhD, Lund University

Similar to our work in other high-priority research areas, The Michael J. Fox Foundation takes a portfolio approach to driving new treatments for dyskinesia. We have made heartening progress identifying and testing promising drug targets in this area. Today the Foundation is working with several companies pursuing different approaches including a clinical trial of mGluR5 (Addex Pharmaceuticals) and late-stage pre-clinical work on mu opioid receptors (Adolor Corporation) and nicotine (Targacept, Inc.); we’re also sponsoring a clinical trial led by researchers at Lund University in Sweden targeting specific serotonin receptors. Another active area of investigation focuses on improving the delivery of levodopa, since current delivery methods are believed to give rise to dyskinesia in the first place.

The Foundation is sponsoring a $1-million clinical study to validate clinical scales that measure dyskinesia (a must for designing effective clinical trials of potential new treatments). And we continue to drive research toward increased understanding of the cellular mechanisms underlying dyskinesia to ensure that every promising therapeutic avenue is identified and pursued.

Top therapeutic targets for dyskinesia:

- Glutamate receptor mGluR5. In five years the Foundation’s de-risking efforts chaperoned mGluR5 from basic discovery to clinical testing and attracted industry interest in the target. In August 2010, Addex Pharmaceuticals of Switzerland received Foundation funding for a Phase 2 clinical trial of an mGluR5-targeting agent that has shown promise in pre-clinical trials and a Phase 1 clinical study. Additionally, Novartis is pursuing clinical testing of mGluR5.

- Mu opioid receptors. Scientific evidence suggests that increased opioid peptide transmission in a part of the brain called the basal ganglia might underlie dyskinesia after long-term levodopa treatment. Agents that reduce this increased activity might benefit patients experiencing dyskinesia as a result of taking levodopa for Parkinson’s disease.

- Serotonin receptors. Researchers at Lund University in Sweden have been funded by MJFF since 2005 to develop a dyskinesia treatment targeting the serotonin system, better known for its role in clinical depression. With Foundation funding, the researchers are now clinically testing a drug that has been shown to act on two specific receptors, known as 5-HT1A and 5-HT1B, located on the serotonin neurons.

Clinical trial infrastructure:

- Validation of clinical rating scales for dyskinesia. Significant challenges in measuring dyskinesia and potential new therapies have created roadblocks to clear-cut trial results and, therefore, industry investment in dyskinesia. The establishment of validated scales for dyskinesia clinical trials would significantly reduce the barrier for biotech and pharmaceutical companies to invest in this debilitating aspect of Parkinson’s.

DYSKINESIA

A debilitating side effect of current “gold –standard” treatment for PD, dyskinesia is difficult to study because it varies in intensity, frequency and duration. MJFF is pushing dyskinesia treatments toward patients by working on biomarkers, new drugs and drug targets and clinical scales simultaneously to optimize dyskinesia clinical trials. There is great optimism in the PD scientific community that we will see successful dyskinesia treatments come to market in the relatively near future.

Repositioning Existing Drugs

By taking a drug already known to be effective for another disease and testing it against Parkinson's disease, clinical testing in Parkinson's patients can begin much faster than traditional therapeutic development would allow. This means a treatment can arrive on pharmacy shelves sooner.

IT TAKES 10-20 YEARS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF A SYMPTOMATIC PARKINSON'S TREATMENT.

“The concept of repurposing an existing drug is a powerful one. It speaks to our broader mission, which is to push treatments to the clinic and accelerate the whole process.” Todd Sherer, PhD, The Michael J. Fox Foundation

Repositioning (also known as repurposing or reprofiling) is testing a drug that is already FDA-approved, or that has been proven safe in a clinical trial, to determine whether it might work in other diseases. By identifying therapies that are already clinically available, The Michael J. Fox Foundation can potentially lessen the time and costs to find drugs that could help people living with Parkinson’s.

Key MJFF-led repositioning efforts in Parkinson’s disease:

- With MJFF funding since 2005, the FDA-approved diabetes drug pioglitazone has now advanced to an NIH-supported Phase 2 clinical study in Parkinson’s.
- Approved high-blood-pressure drug isradipine is now being tested in an MJFF-funded Phase 2 clinical study of 100 people with Parkinson’s with final results expected by year-end 2011.
- In September 2011, the Foundation launched its first repositioning-specific RFA, funding about $3 million to investigate seven known drugs that are potentially effective against Parkinson’s.

De-risking Parkinson’s Research for Industry

Repositioning is just one of a broad portfolio of MJFF approaches to lessen the risk for industry players of investment in Parkinson’s disease drug development. As we’ve taken on more projects targeted toward industry, our role in the field has expanded, as has our influence on the agendas of other critical players. In 2010, we formally established an on-staff Research Partnerships team charged with engaging industry leaders across the board, whether in our brainstorming and planning meetings, as funding partners to our significant research initiatives such as PPMI, or in special efforts such as our LRRK2 industry working group.

Today, MJFF has funded over 135 unique projects led by industry, with investments of over $65 million. Our funding to small and mid-sized biotech has helped move drug targets toward the clinic. Seed grants to large pharma have given PD a seat at the table — and as those grants have become successful the companies themselves have funded their furtherance.

MJFF also has become increasingly involved in developing and distributing tools that make PD drug development more effective and efficient. These include laboratory reagents, pre-clinical models, and biomarkers. And our PD Therapeutics Conference has become the most significant Parkinson’s drug development meeting in the world.

BRIN WOJCICKI CHALLENGE

for THE MICHAEL J. FOX FOUNDATION FOR PARKINSON'S RESEARCH

The Michael J. Fox Foundation has been challenged by longtime Foundation friends Sergey Brin, co-founder of Google, and his wife, Anne Wojcicki, co-founder of personal genetics company 23andMe. If we can raise $50 million in capacity-building funds by year-end 2012, Sergey and Anne will match it dollar-for-dollar.

The Challenge comes at an opportune moment. As we look ahead toward the next phase of our work, several conclusions emerge. First and foremost, our model is working. Due in no small part to over $260 million in MJFF investments since 2000, the stage of Parkinson's drug development as a whole is moving forward. We have funded work on over 100 therapeutic targets, and, with our backing, several have taken significant steps toward clinical testing and practical patient relevance.

This is exciting. Yet it also poses new challenges for our problem-solving. As resource-intensive as pre-clinical research is, the clinical projects we see on the horizon come with exponentially steeper price tags. New tools and strategies are required to rally the patient community to volunteer to take part in studies that urgently need them. And we must continue to vet new and existing potential therapies at every stage of development to identify the most promising and push them closer to pharmacy shelves.

If we can raise the $50 million we need, the Brin Wojcicki Challenge will expand our capacity to streamline and fund targeted research toward Parkinson's breakthroughs. It will allow us to bring our successful out-of-the-box strategies into critical areas that remain underfunded. It will aid our continuing efforts to drive pre-clinical research, lead groundbreaking public-private partnerships, and attract broad expertise to address the unmet medical needs of Parkinson's patients.

The MJFF Legacy Circle

The Legacy Circle honors friends who support the Foundation's work through bequests or other planned gifts. While MJFF's mission has always been to put itself out of business by curing PD, planned gifts provide a major, long-term funding source that we can both plan around and leverage immediately to accelerate high-impact research.

2010 Financial Highlights

For PD patients, those who care about them, and anyone who cares deeply about putting charitable dollars to good use, the reasons to give to The Michael J. Fox Foundation are numerous. In turbulent economic times, we know that donors think hard about their charitable giving and choose to give where their dollars will have the greatest impact — an analysis that we believe reinforces our supporters' commitment to partner with us.

In 2010, despite a challenging economy, MJFF funded just under $50 million — our greatest annual commitment to date — in research targeted to speed treatment breakthroughs into Parkinson's patients' hands. Yet we measure our success not by dollars raised or spent, but by scientific advances achieved.

We're proud of what we've accomplished to date. But we stand on the precipice of a new day in Parkinson's research, and we will never be satisfied until we have attained our goal of eradicating PD. As we look to the future, we continue to refine our approach to solve the problems and address the challenges standing in the way of progress now.

One element of our strategy that will reliably not change is our insistence on fiscal accountability and transparency. These are core elements of our organizational values, particularly in how we spend supporters' contributions. We're proud of our track record of efficiency: Since inception, 87 cents of every dollar spent has gone straight to our research efforts. And we intentionally have no endowment or excessive reserves. Every dollar we raise is immediately deployed to advance research with the best chance of leading to new PD therapies and, ultimately, a cure.

The American Institute of Philanthropy rates MJFF as an "A" in its list of Top-Rated charities, based on MJFF's organizational and financial efficiency. In 2010 we were included for the first time in the Chronicle of Philanthropy's "Philanthropy 400," an annual ranking of the 400 U.S. charities that raise the most funds from private sources. And our recent keynote at the annual meeting of the Center for Effective Philanthropy was the highest-rated conference session in the organization's history.

None of this would be possible without the dedication of you, our longstanding friends and supporters. Thank you for all you do.

2010 financial highlights follow. Full audited financials and our most recent IRS Form 990s are available at www.michaeljfox.org.

“Despite the fact that many foundations and other nonprofits have struggled recently, MJFF has been able to consistently increase revenue year over year. With its inarguable success, the organization doesn’t seem like it should be looking to change things up any time soon. But it’s not resting on its laurels.” Fundraising Success magazine
