The Michael J. Fox Foundation
for Parkinson's Research
2016 Annual Report

The Michael J. Fox Foundation is dedicated to finding a cure for Parkinson's disease through an aggressively funded research agenda and to ensuring the development of improved therapies for those living with Parkinson's today.

A Note from Michael

Dear Friend,

Each year, we are honored to share how your unflagging determination and sheer generosity have fortified our mission to do whatever it takes to drive research. As a year full of new endeavors and tremendous growth, 2016 was no exception.

We still have much to do, but your dedication is building a better future for the millions living with Parkinson's.

I'm so grateful for your friendship. Together, I have no doubt that we will cure Parkinson's.

An Update from the CEO and the Co-Founder

Todd Sherer, PhD
Chief Executive Officer

Deborah W. Brooks
Co-Founder and Executive Vice Chairman

The question most frequently asked of The Michael J. Fox Foundation (MJFF) is: “How close are we to a cure for Parkinson’s disease?” With nearly $750 million in Parkinson’s disease (PD) research funded to date, the simplest answer is: closer than ever.

Today’s PD drug development pipeline demonstrates a richness and vibrancy we could only dream of a few short years ago.

But nothing is simple, least of all brain research, and every promising step forward reveals complex new challenges for our problem-solving. As you’ll read in this report, our community increasingly is called on not just to provide funding for the most important research projects in the Parkinson’s space, but also to engage with MJFF as we lead and coordinate wide-ranging initiatives that help advance the entire field — frameworks, as it were, for progress.

In the Foundation’s short history, Parkinson’s drug development has experienced a metamorphosis, and it is fair to say that the state of Parkinson’s science as a whole has meaningfully advanced. Multiple scientific breakthroughs, promising new leads and powerful information technology have combined to set the stage for better disease understanding from the patients themselves.

Our on-staff PhD-trained neuroscientists paired with business-trained project managers are identifying, vetting and advancing the most promising ideas in Parkinson’s research, building a portfolio that includes investigations of over 1,000 drug targets to date.

“The Michael J. Fox Foundation, almost singlehandedly, has catapulted... research.”

—BioWorld Today, October 2016

When a promising target demonstrates sustained potential to benefit people with Parkinson's, we move quickly to coordinate an entire field of activity in support of its continued forward movement.

We tackle roadblocks head-on, providing researchers with resources to generate data and build the case for high-impact ideas, and sophisticated tools that can help science move through testing and toward regulatory approval faster. This includes characterizing molecular biology, developing strategies to objectively measure pathology and treatment effects, assembling patient cohorts, and creating technology infrastructure to gather and analyze “big data” for use by researchers in MJFF-led and independent studies.

And, it's clear that our Foundation's “de-risking” method — a critical framework for progress — is working. Today, several symptomatic therapies for motor and non-motor symptoms are in Phase III clinical testing, with one or more expected to file for FDA approval within the calendar year; compare that to the PD landscape as recently as 2011, when not a single Parkinson's therapy was being tested in late-stage clinical trials. And there are no fewer than nine disease-modifying therapies advancing through clinical testing that could slow, stop or even reverse progression of PD — something no current treatment is proven to do.

This progress is set against the backdrop of a new era of patient power, with a seismic opportunity for patients to partner with scientists to influence research design and outcomes. Whether volunteering for traditional or virtual clinical trials, advocating for public policy or — like those honored in this report — providing significant financial support for our work, the Parkinson's community is more committed than ever before to getting involved. That's why we've restructured our staff to add a Community Engagement team, our newest framework dedicated to helping patients and their loved ones navigate the broad range of multi-faceted opportunities to play a personal role in our mission.

Any truly patient-centric program starts from the proposition that patients are the true experts on living with disease. Today, thousands of patients and their loved ones have enrolled in Fox Insight (foxinsight.org), our online clinical study, helping researchers gain a holistic understanding of PD and revolutionizing Parkinson's research by contributing PROs (patient-reported outcomes) on disease course, symptom progression and treatment outcomes, among other vital data.

These participants are part of a growing community of citizen scientists. More than 65,000 have registered with our smart-matching tool Fox Trial Finder (foxtrialfinder.org), which in 2016 expanded to include atypical parkinsonisms multiple system atrophy, Lewy body dementia and others. More than 1,000 have enrolled in the MJFF-sponsored Parkinson's Progression Markers Initiative (PPMI), our landmark study launched in 2010 to jump-start the search for Parkinson's biomarkers — disease indicators that are critical missing links in the search for next-generation PD treatments. And the study has expanded beyond the original cohort to look at genetics to track the disease process at the earliest stages of illness.

And because Parkinson's public policy concerns have evolved with the landscape of Parkinson's therapeutic development, in 2016, the Foundation announced its integration of the former Parkinson's Action Network and launch of a robust policy program. Our work in three priority areas — federal research funding, drug regulation and approval, and health care delivery and reimbursement — is bringing the passion and commitment of the PD community to bear on articulating and advancing public policy that stands to affect millions of patients and families.

Drug development is a high-risk business, and sometimes a discouraging one. At The Michael J. Fox Foundation, we believe we are building the framework to tilt the odds in favor of success — identifying and accelerating the research with potential to transform every life touched by Parkinson's. We can't do it without you. Thank you for sharing our vision.

With gratitude,

Todd Sherer, PhD

Planned Giving

The Legacy Circle honors friends who support the Foundation's work through bequests or other planned gifts. While our mission has always been to find the cure and go out of business, planned gifts provide a major, long-term funding source that we can both plan around and leverage immediately to accelerate life-changing research and treatments now and in the future.

If you have made estate plans that include The Michael J. Fox Foundation, contact Shirley Nagar at 212-509-0995 ext. 240 or plannedgiving@michaeljfox.org.

Industry Partners

The Michael J. Fox Foundation is grateful to the biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies whose support helps us accelerate clinical trial engagement, bring together the nationwide Parkinson's community and push PD research forward. Collectively, these partners contributed more than $6 million to our programs in 2016.

We also extend our thanks to the 2016 Parkinson's Disease Education Consortium, an alliance of industry partners who support our commitment to furnishing high-quality educational resources for the Parkinson's community while preserving our track record of efficiency in stewarding donor-raised contributions for maximum impact on Parkinson's drug development.

Disease-modifying Treatments

Fig A1

“Cures” — that is, treatments that could slow, stop, reverse or even prevent Parkinson’s progression, something no current treatment has been proven to do — remain patients’ most urgent unmet medical need. Researchers refer to this kind of treatment as “disease-modifying,” and three-quarters of The Michael J. Fox Foundation (MJFF) funding is devoted to its pursuit.

As in many diseases since the completion of the Human Genome Project in 2003, Parkinson’s research has been transformed by genetic discoveries. But these findings are meaningful to patients only when methodically translated into practical treatments. MJFF is working to ensure that translation moves as quickly and efficiently as possible.

— Alpha-synuclein continues to earn its status as arguably the highest priority target in Parkinson’s disease (PD) research with five patient clinical trials moving through or completing Phase I safety trials. In 2016, an experimental “vaccine” approach, developed by MJFF-awardee AFFiRiS (an Austrian biotech) reached a new milestone by showing the treatment can successfully harness antibodies against this protein that forms abnormal, toxic clumps in the brains and bodies of people with Parkinson’s.

— Researchers are currently working on therapies to address GCase dysfunction in people with GBA (glucosidase, beta, acid gene) mutations. In late 2016, an MJFF-funded team reported that GBA mutations put Parkinson’s patients at higher risk of cognitive decline, particularly in the presence of certain “severe” types of GBA mutation. These findings and other current initiatives may inform how we develop therapies. In January 2017, the first trial of a drug developed by Sanofi Genzyme, began in people with GBA mutation. Notable for its potential to treat PD, the study also represents a major step forward for personalized medicine in Parkinson’s disease.

— Industry leaders continue to take notice of MJFF’s efforts to keep LRRK2 a priority target. MJFF has applied its comprehensive roadmap strategy to LRRK2 through a consortium-based approach to investigate biology, fund therapeutic development, create research tools and recruit individuals with LRRK2 mutations to participate in clinical studies. Dozens of academic laboratories and several pharmaceutical companies partner with MJFF on active LRRK2 programs, and clinical testing is expected by 2018. In 2016, a new biotech company Denali launched with LRRK2-based treatments for Parkinson’s core to its strategic business plan.

In addition to the tremendous promise of genetics, MJFF is pursuing multiple therapeutic strategies that work on non-genetic targets, primarily through repurposing treatments already approved for use in other diseases.

— MJFF has helped drive investigations and trials on several drugs including isradipine (a drug used to treat high-blood pressure that may prevent the death of dopamine-producing cells); inosine (a dietary supplement that the body converts into the antioxidant urate); exenatide (a Type 2 diabetes drug that could possibly improve physical and cognitive functions); and nilotinib (a leukemia drug that could possibly reduce Parkinson’s-related toxicity). As evidence and efficacy for the drugs to treat symptoms of PD safely are known, the opportunity and timeline to accelerate for PD patient use is shortened because it is already available in the market.

Emerging Therapeutic Targets

Several novel drug targets have been getting a lot of attention lately in Parkinson’s disease research — and for good reason.

- C-Abl, a protein, has shown early promise as a potential disease-modifying therapy, and The Michael J. Fox Foundation (MJFF) funded research in this area as early as 2007. While much work remains to understand c-Abl’s role in PD progression, there is increasing activity to unlock key questions about its potential. The Foundation recently provided Georgia-based biotech Inhibikase with a grant to explore the development of advanced c-Abl inhibitors that show promise in pre-clinical models in terms of safety profile and brain penetrance versus other drugs in their class.
- An MJFF co-funded study with Gladstone Institute found that the single protein Nrf2 is key to fighting other faulty proteins that cause damage to neurons and kills brain cells. It also seems to interact with key PD drug targets LRRK2 and alpha-synuclein, ramping up scientific interest in its actions in body cells. Steven Finkbeiner, MD, PhD, senior author of the study, said that Nrf2 is “the most protective thing we’ve ever found.”

PD Biomarkers

Fig. A2

Since its earliest days, The Michael J. Fox Foundation has been a field leader in the pursuit of Parkinson's biomarkers — objective measures of disease risk or progression. Through varied funding and strategic initiatives, the Foundation has sought definitive diagnostics and clinical trial endpoints to speed development of promising new treatments.

The Foundation launched the Parkinson's Progression Markers Initiative (PPMI) in 2010 to identify and validate measures of Parkinson's disease.

Six years later, the landmark clinical study is at 33 clinical sites around the world, has enrolled 1,500 volunteers, generated a data set accessed by researchers over 1 million times and received nearly 100 applications from scientific teams worldwide for use of the study's well-characterized biosamples.

Biotech and pharmaceutical companies increasingly look to PPMI as a model; its protocol and evolving body of results assist neuroscience groups in designing studies, integrating state-of-the-art technologies, modeling outcomes, and gaining buy-in from senior leadership who routinely are called on to make difficult funding decisions.

The dataset is now included as a resource in large-scale projects such as the Critical Path for Parkinson's Consortium, creating tools for optimized study design, and the planned National Institute of Health Accelerating Medicines Partnership - Parkinson's Disease program toward biomarker discovery and novel target identification.

Research conducted using PPMI assets has contributed to greater understanding of cognitive and mood changes in Parkinson's, helped establish a genetic risk profile that may form the basis of predicting who will get Parkinson's and refined clinical scales to measure disease progression over time. In addition to these important results, PPMI has proved the feasibility of finding specific populations (such as newly diagnosed or with genetic forms of PD) and has been a pioneer in using tools such as social media to help speed up enrollment and cut costs in a multi-year study.

Market-bound Therapies

Fig. A3

The Michael J. Fox Foundation (MJFF) is committed to speeding treatments to improve today's patients' quality of life by more adequately addressing the symptoms of Parkinson's disease. In 2016, several experimental drugs and treatments moved into end-stage development and are anticipated to reach market within the next one to three years.

- A new extended-release formulation of amantadine, by biotech Adamas Pharmaceuticals, is entering the home stretch of clinical testing, with a decision regarding approval from the FDA expected later this year. The formulation is taken at bedtime and slowly released into the bloodstream so that peak amounts of the drug are present when it is time to wake up. The company's progress was accelerated by the availability of a new dyskinesia rating scale developed by MJFF in response to the lack of a validated tool in this area.
- In September 2016, MJFF-funded biotech Cynapsus was acquired by pharma firm Sunovion for over half a billion dollars. The deal was made on the strength of Cynapsus' lead product, an under-the-tongue, fast-acting "Listerine strip" addressing "off" episodes — when symptoms return before it is time for the next dose of levodopa. The treatment has now attained Phase III clinical testing and is likely to undergo review by the FDA within several months.
- Following $1.3 million in MJFF funding to drive the early stages of clinical development, Civitas (now Acorda) developed an inhaled powder formulation of levodopa — like an asthma inhaler for Parkinson's for off-time rescue.
- During summer 2016, Israel-based biotech NeuroDerm presented positive results from a Phase II study of an under-the-skin "pump-patch" delivering levodopa and carbidopa continuously. MJFF has invested about $2.5 million in the development of the product, which aims to lessen motor fluctuations in advancing Parkinson's disease.

Accepting the Challenge

In November 2016, The Michael J. Fox Foundation named the winners of the first Parkinson's Progression Markers Initiative (PPMI) Data Challenge. The Foundation asked data scientists to provide a model of either Parkinson's disease subtypes or baseline predictors of progression using PPMI data. These tools could accelerate testing of new Parkinson's treatments by helping researchers design trials and choose study volunteers.

The winners were Duygu Tosun-Turgut, PhD, for her report on the best factors for predicting slow versus fast progression of Parkinson's utilizing MRI scans of brain structure and functionality and Unified Parkinson's Disease Rating Scale III to create a baseline; and Fei Wang, PhD, for his outline of characterization subgroups based on clinical symptoms that may allow trial sponsors to test a new therapy.

Each individual received a $25,000 award furnished by the Foundation and supported in part by GE Healthcare.

In Memoriam

In June 2016, The Michael J. Fox Foundation (MJFF) and the Parkinson's community mourned the passing of Muhammad Ali while celebrating his iconic presence and indomitable spirit.

Following two decades of unparalleled triumph in the boxing ring, Ali retired from the sport in 1981, shortly before his Parkinson's disease diagnosis at age 42.

With his wife, Lonnie, by his side, he shifted focus to advocacy and humanitarianism.

“Curing Parkinson’s disease once seemed impossible. But momentum is at last on our side. We believe without fail that cures are within reach if we dare to do more, not less. Muhammad Ali showed us what it means to have the heart of a champion. Now is our chance to honor him by finishing the fight he could not.”

—Michael J. Fox and Todd Sherer, PhD, CNN.com

After Michael J. Fox revealed his PD diagnosis publicly in 1998, he and Ali joined forces to shine a spotlight on the critical need to fund research. Lonnie and Muhammad Ali joined the MJFF Founders' Council, and Lonnie served on the Foundation's Board of Directors from 2001 to 2004.

“Impossible
declaration.
It’s a dare.”

—Muhammad Ali

The Major Research Prizes

Fig. A4

In November 2016, The Michael J. Fox Foundation (MJFF) awarded three researchers prizes for their groundbreaking work in advancing therapeutic development for the benefit of those living with Parkinson's and dystonia.

— Susan Bressman, MD, and Laurie Ozelius, PhD, accepted the second annual Bachmann-Strauss Prize for Excellence in Dystonia Research. Together, their research identified three primary or isolated dystonia genes, and they have built a repository of thousands of genes associated with dystonia. Their work also has yielded innovative imaging studies in families with these genetic associations. Created through a research alliance between MJFF and The Bachmann-Strauss Dystonia and Parkinson Foundation (BSDPF), the $100,000 prize will be shared by Drs. Bressman and Ozelius to further their individual dystonia studies.

— Ira Shoulson, MD, received the Robert A. Pritzker Prize for Leadership in Parkinson's Research. Dr. Shoulson co-founded the Parkinson Study Group in 1985 and the Huntington Study Group in 1994, two international academic consortia devoted to research and development of treatments. He also had made key contributions to regulatory science and medicine and was formerly a Joseph P. Kennedy Jr. Foundation health policy fellow in the U.S. Senate. The $100,000 Robert A. Pritzker Prize for Leadership in Parkinson's Research is named in honor of the late industrialist, entrepreneur and philanthropist. Renowned artist and Parkinson's patient Tom Shannon designed the award. Dr. Shoulson will direct his prize toward advancing research on Parkinson's patient-reported outcomes and patient preferences.

Generosity

Fig. A5

In October 2016, Nike once again brought a piece of pop-culture history to life. The 2016 Nike Mag shoe, complete with revolutionary self-lacing technology, was unveiled to the world through an online draw and international live auctions that in total raised $6.95 million in just over a month to support the Foundation's mission.

Nike's Tiffany Beers and Tinker Hatfield at A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to Cure Parkinson's, where the final pair of self-lacing Mags was auctioned for a record-breaking $200,000.

The limited-edition release of 89 pairs of self-lacing Nike Mag shoes just like the ones Michael J. Fox wore in Back to the Future Part II electrified film fans, sneakerheads and the PD community worldwide through the eight-day draw, auctions in Hong Kong and London and a bidding war for the final pair at the Foundation's New York City gala in November. Speaking to Foundation Board member George Stephanopoulos on "Good Morning America," Michael J. Fox summed up the excitement with a simple statement: "The shoes are amazing."

Through two events generating worldwide interest in 2011 and 2016, respectively, Nike has raised more than $16 million for the Foundation's vital work and spotlighted the urgent need for new and better treatments for Parkinson's.

Team Fox

In 2016, more than 4,200 Team Fox members around the country and all over the world brought together their local communities in shared pursuit of a cure for Parkinson's.

Together, these local champions have raised more than $10 million. Thanks to an anonymous donor, 100 percent of Team Fox proceeds went directly to the Foundation's programs.

Patient Power

The Michael J. Fox Foundation (MJFF) recognizes the critical role of Parkinson's patients and families in drug development research; as such, we have significantly expanded our efforts to engage, educate and mobilize a broad cross-section of people with PD and their loved ones.

In light of the advancing state of Parkinson's research overall, it has become clear that bringing treatments over the finish line today requires a concerted focus on Parkinson's public policy. In March 2016, MJFF and the Parkinson's Action Network (PAN) announced the dissolution of PAN and MJFF's decision to take on PAN's mission to bolster policy and advocacy efforts serving the Parkinson's community. The Foundation is building a policy program that addresses three priority areas: securing federal research funding for Parkinson's, bringing effective new therapies to patients without delays or sacrificing safety, and safeguarding access to care for patients and their loved ones.

MJFF also maintains strong relationships with the PD community and provides resources to help patients and their families connect with educational resources, optimized clinical care and technology-based platforms to access clinical studies.

— Launched in 2012, Fox Trial Finder connects potential PD research volunteers — patients and controls — with studies at clinical centers that need them. More than 65,000 individuals have registered to date.

— Fox Insight is a portal of virtual research opportunities where patients and controls participate remotely through prompting to report symptoms, treatments, quality of life and family medical history every 90 days. Data is anonymous and available to researchers worldwide. The platform also incorporates data from other tools such as mobile apps that work with Apple's recently launched ResearchKit software platform, which has enrolled more than 5,000 participants since its beta launch, smartwatches and wearables.

— Our monthly research-focused webinar/podcast series features MJFF Contributing Editor Dave Iverson, a veteran journalist who himself lives with Parkinson's. The series now routinely attracts up to three thousand registrants a month. Movement Disorders Specialist and MJFF Vice President of Medical Communications Rachel Dolhun, MD, uses digital platforms (web and social) to field the community's most frequently asked questions, through her Ask the MD series and Facebook Live broadcasts.

Optimizing Parkinson's Care

The Michael J. Fox Foundation and AbbVie are proud that Partners in Parkinson's has served more than 30,000 members of the Parkinson's community from coast to coast since its launch in 2014. This strategic health initiative aims to fill in knowledge gaps and provide new educational tools and resources for the Parkinson's community to help patients optimize their care from diagnosis through advanced disease. Combining virtual and face-to-face opportunities, including day-long symposia attracting up to 1,000 attendees, Partners in Parkinson's empowers patients and families to “discover the benefits of team” by connecting them with information and resources that can be crucial in developing a plan of care specific to their Parkinson's.

2016 Financial Highlights

At The Michael J. Fox Foundation, we take seriously our responsibility to the Parkinson's community. We work hard to maximize every dollar to drive science with the greatest potential to benefit patients and families. Since our inception in 2000, 89 cents of every dollar we have spent has gone directly to research programs — resulting in nearly $750 million in research funded to date.

This dedication to efficiency and accountability has always been a core of our Foundation. And these values will continue to drive our progress until we deliver an end to PD, and close our doors.

The 2016 financial highlights follow. Full audited financials and our most recent IRS Form 990s are available at michaeljfox.org/annualreport

2016 Financial Highlights Canada

Since our launch in 2000, The Michael J. Fox Foundation (MJFF) has received a steady outpouring of Canadian support. Canadian researchers have been actively involved in our scientific agenda since the earliest days and individuals from across the country invest in our research efforts or take part in Team Fox. MJFF officially registered as a Canadian charity in 2009.

When the cure for Parkinson's is found — and it will be — it will be because of all of us,
working together.
